The Center for Social and Religious Research continues a one-hundred year tradition at Hartford Seminary of linking social scientific perspectives to religious concerns. The Center is committed to furthering the disciplined understanding of the inner life and resources of religious institutions in relationship to the possibilities and limits placed on them by the social and cultural contexts into which God has called them.

Plowshares Institute is an international educational, research, and service organization working for a more just, sustainable, and peaceful world community. A biblically inspired vision of the reign of God which calls for the empowerment of the poor and the transformation of the non-poor motivates Plowshares' decade-long focus on the transformation of theological education and current programs to empower communities for reconciliation with justice through training in community conflict resolution.
